

Dear Muse,

I want to share this book with you because I know you aren't in good terms with one of your friends, and maybe this book could help you understand more about friendship.

The story is about a boy nicknamed 'The Little Prince' meeting the narrator in the Sahara Desert. As they try to survive, the Little Prince shares stories about his home planet and his travels. I think the problem of you and your friend's relationship is that you both don't understand each other, so by reading the narrator and Little Prince's interaction, you could learn more about empathy and understanding.

As the fox said, 'You can only see things clearly with your heart. What is essential is invisible to the eye.' This quote says that true clarity and understanding comes from emotional perception, and we should trust our feelings instead of what we can see.

This book actually helps you learn a lot of lessons, like love and loneliness. I hope this book can help you know more about friendship, and inspire you as much as it inspired me. Thank you for the support!

Cheers,

Eunice
